Winnebago County Board did right by UW-Fox Valley

On Mondays, as a start-of-the-week departure from our usual editorial format, we offer you Thumbs Up and Thumbs Down, a smorgasbord of sweet and sour bite-sized opinions:

■ To the Winnebago County Board, for approving the construction of a new communication arts center at the University of Wisconsin-Fox Valley. The much-needed building sat in limbo for years as officials and the public wrangled with the value of such an addition versus the more than $5 million it would cost the county. After that due diligence, the board made the right decision to fund its share of the project, joining Outagamie County, with which it splits financial responsibility for the school, and the state. Now it's up to UWFV to raise $2 million in private funds to round out the final cost.
